Make Futile Attempt at Rescue.
Body Is Recovered.

JAMES A. SULLIVAN.

James A. Sullivan, member of The Star's staff of photographers—famously known as "Jimmy"—by a host of friends—was drowned off the power launch Foam about 6:50 o'clock last night, near Jones point lighthouse, a short distance from Alexandria. He went down within a few feet of the boat from which he fell, his friends both aboard the Foam and other boats being unable to save him. Members of the crew of the police boat searched for the body last night, but without success.

Victor Norris, deckhand on the police boat, this afternoon about 12:15 o'clock recovered the body near the scene of the accident. He was working in a small boat when he made the recovery. Lieut. Dean, in charge of the harbor precinct, and Mr. Harvey, who was aboard the Foam when the accident happened, were in the boat with Norris. The body was brought to the city and turned over to an undertaker.

The accident happened while Sullivan was on his homeward trip from Marshall Hall with Franklin Harvey and John Winston of 628 6th street northeast, where Sullivan resided, and William Wright, 225 Florida avenue northeast. Sullivan was conversing with Claude Dombhart, who was aboard the launch Lorraine, 24, about taking a photograph of the Lorraine, it is stated, when he lost his balance and fell into the river.

Sullivan had promised Dombhart, it is stated, that he would photograph his boat the first time they met on the river. If he had a camera with him, and yesterday, when the boats met, Sullivan was reminded of his promise. He had no camera with him, however, and was unable to take the picture. Sullivan was seated on an icebox at the stern of the boat.

Futile Attempts at Rescue.
Immediately following Sullivan's fall there was a cry of "Man overboard," and the Foam was turned about. Harvey jumped overboard and went to his aid, while Frank Hardie, aboard the Bohemia, made a similar effort. Sullivan swam a distance of fully thirty feet, it is stated, and probably would have been saved had lifelines thrown from the boat reached him in time for him to grasp them. Records were used by the men aboard the Bohemia in the hope that he might be able to hold on. It is said a hook tore the drowning man's clothing.

The searchers were unable to find the body, and the police of the harbor precinct went to the scene in response to a message telephoned from Alexandria.

Begins Service as "Copy Boy."
The deceased, who was twenty-six years old, was employed as a messenger to "run copy" for The Evening Star when he was a boy. His strict attention to his work and a willingness to be accommodated won him many friends, and he was a member of the staff of photographers. He was fond of fishing and boating and spent much of his spare time on the river.

He was married only a few months ago. His wife was visiting friends yesterday afternoon, and when she returned home she became aware that something out of the ordinary had happened, and expressed the fear that her husband had met with a fatal accident. There had been no news of him.
